Traditional chinese medicine places a large emphasis on the role of emotion in almost all illnesses. The greatest chinese doctors were renowned for their deep understanding of the mind and emotions. It is therefore not surprising that many people encountering emotional problems such as anxiety, depression, habitual stress and low self-esteem are returning to this ancient system of medicine, often with profound results. Chinese medicine, considers the repression of emotions such as anger, frustration and sorrow as contributing to many physical illnesses and ultimately more severe emotional disorders. When we suppress emotions with our conscious mind we are essentially training our subconscious mind to accept. These negative emotional feelings as normal. If this is done continuously, the subconscious mind can become confused and polarized.
